Why profiling?

By engraving or printing on a product, you make it unique and unlike any other. It's a way to stand out from standard gifts and show that you have put extra thought and care into choosing something special.

We have been working for over 30 years and know what works. We customize the printing technique for each product's characteristics. Below, we explain how the different printing techniques differ. If it still feels confusing, we are happy to assist you in choosing the printing method and placement.

Transfer Printing

Transfer printing involves printing the logo on a decal that is then applied to the product and subsequently fired in. This encapsulates the colors in the product's glaze, making the print exceptionally durable.

Transfer printing is perfect for porcelain that needs to be washed in an industrial dishwasher. It is also suitable for more intricate prints.

Pad Printing

Pad printing involves etching the logo onto a printing plate. A silicone pad then picks up the ink from the printing plate and transfers it to the surface of the product. The printing area varies depending on the shape of the mug and requires a specific distance from edges and handles.

Pad printing can withstand hundreds of machine washes without a decrease in quality.

Laser Engraving

Laser engraving is a method that uses a laser beam to create permanent marks or patterns on a surface, such as steel and wood.

Laser engraving is the most environmentally friendly and sustainable method.
